

Reflections of a southern sporting life

Reflections of a southern sporting life includes details of the authors life in the southeast and the vast changes in hunting and fishing from the mid-20th century until 2014. It is a loose collection of articles about the outdoors, adventures, instructional material and some philosophical insights of the author. Ross has tracked changes in wildlife populations and changes in hunters attitudes with the early emphasis on small game that shifted in the 70s and 80s to an increased interest in big game. On a personal note, Ross has gone through an evolution as a hunter, progressing from a small game hunter to deer and turkeys. In the last few years, he has evolved from a gun hunter to an archery hunter and has even moved from compound bows to traditional archery. Ross has shared his love of the outdoor with many, being a Certified Fishing Instructor for SCDNR and conducting Primitive Craft and Survival Seminars for local sportsmen and for the Saluda River Archery Clubs summer camp for kids. Ross has also taught classes on writing for publication and primitive and survival skills for Camp Greenville, the Greenville County, SC, YMCA camp at their PEAK conference (Preparing Educators for Adventures with Kids). The PEAK conference is a time of instruction for teachers, professors, camp directors and others to learn skills that may be shared with kids to involve them and teach them about what life has to offer. Ross is an enthusiastic sportsman, and in addition to writing and photography for several outdoor magazines and two newspapers, he is a big and small game hunter, flint knapper, primitive craft and survival skills instructor, kayaker, hiker, fly fisherman, fly tyer and more. You will enjoy his down to earth approach to his subjects as he covers a wide range of topics in this book.
